

Characterization

The creation of a fictional character is called characterization. Characterization can be direct, which means the author explicitly tells you what the character is like, or it can be indirect, which means that the author implies what a character is like through what they think, do, and say, and how they interact with other characters.

Choose a character from the assigned text. Briefly describe the character's personality. In the boxes below, provide the text evidence for your answer.
