

ANSWERS

1. The Supreme Court is the highest-level court in the United States.
2. While the other U.S. courts have jurisdiction over particular regions, the Supreme Court's jurisdiction extends over the entire country.
3. The Supreme Court only tries cases in which there is an issue of constitutionality. This means that they guard and interpret the Constitution as it applies to matters of law.