

Genre and Resolution

The resolution is the part of a story in which the conflict is resolved. It takes place at the end of the story, following the climax. Readers of different genres have different expectations for what should be in the resolution, depending on the conventions of the genre.

What genre are you writing in?

What are the conventions of this genre?

What are the obligatory scenes of this genre?

How does your reader expect that your story will resolve?

How do you plan to resolve your story?