

ANSWERS

1. Migrant workers move from farm to farm in California looking for work.
2. His family lost their farm and their store when the Great Depression happened, and they went to California looking for work.
3. He worked in all sorts of different fields from grapes to beets.
4. The days were long and the work was very hard. Despite working so hard, the family barely had enough to eat. The farmers didn't treat them decently. They didn't get breaks, there were no bathrooms for them to use, and there was no clean water for them to drink. People who complained got fired.
