

ANSWERS

A successful public interest advocate has a broad set of analytical skills, and the energy, positive attitude, and sense of commitment needed to serve as a ready resource for policymakers and their staff.

law, political science, communications, political communications, computer science

on-the-job-training in apprenticeships, internships, externships, fellowships, and entry-level positions at public interest advocacy organizations