

ANSWERS

They first ignored it, thinking it was just another nuisance from the colonies.

The pamphlet begins that it would not become the dignity of the sovereign of England to defend himself against the colonists because to do so would recognize the dignity and independence that they claim to have while they are in fact in revolt against their government.

England basically accuses the colonies of hypocrisy in saying "all men are created equal," focusing on the issue of slavery and accusing the colonists of rebelling because King George had offered freedom to slaves.

None. They ignored it.
