

ANSWERS

1. In the beginning, Henry thinks that courage is about what other people think of you. It's something external to a person, something perceived by others.
2. His mother's definition of courage is to do what is right and what is expected of you, to do your duty, no matter what the cost.
3. He comes to see courage as a synthesis of these two ideas; it's not just about what others think of you, but it does include an aspect of that.
