

Name _____ Earth Day

How it Started

Once upon a time, there was a beautiful planet called Earth. It was filled with lush forests, sparkling rivers, and magnificent creatures. People lived on Earth and enjoyed its bountiful resources, but they also began to realize that their actions were harming the planet.

In the 1960s, a brave senator from Wisconsin named Gaylord Nelson became concerned about the environment. He wanted to raise awareness about the pollution and damage happening to Earth. Inspired by the student anti-war movement, he came up with a brilliant idea: a special day dedicated to the planet. And so, Earth Day was born.

On April 22, 1970, the first Earth Day was celebrated. People from all walks of life, young and old, came together to learn and take action. They held rallies, planted trees, and cleaned up parks. It was a day filled with love and respect for Mother Earth.

Earth Day became so popular that it soon became an annual event. People realized that they needed to protect the environment every day, not just on Earth Day. Governments around the world started passing laws to protect the planet. People started recycling, conserving energy, and using eco-friendly products.

Every year on Earth Day, people unite to make a difference. They organize marches, educate others about environmental issues, and take part in community projects. Schools hold special activities and teach students about the importance of taking care of the Earth.

Thanks to Earth Day, people have become more aware of their actions and their impact on the planet. They have realized that they need to protect Earth's resources for future generations. Earth Day has become a global movement, reminding us all to be good stewards of the Earth.
