

ANSWERS

1. Aporia is a type of rhetorical device that expresses insincere doubt. In aporia, a writer or speaker asks a question to which they already have an answer.
2. Typically, after asking the question, they will either answer it, or leave the question open for the audience to keep in mind. It is a way of calling attention to a particular point.
3. rhetorical question
4. speeches, essays, or anywhere that a writer or speaker is trying to make a particular point
5. will vary