

ANSWERS

1. a feeling of anxiety or excitement, along with a desire to know what happens next.
2. it makes the story interesting and keeps the reader reading
3. The climax of a story is the turning point, when the main character's problem is about to be solved. The climax is typically the most exciting part of the story. It usually involves some kind of showdown between the main character and the source of the main conflict in the story. The climax is one scene that occurs near the end of a story.
4. The climax pays off all of the suspense that has been created over the main story problem during the rising action of the story.