

ANSWERS

1. His only real obstacle is in his head. He isn't sure what to believe or what to do about what he knows. He knows who murdered his father almost from the beginning and living in the same castle with Claudius he has ample opportunity to kill him.
2. Can we believe the evidence of our eyes? Is revenge justified? Can we predict the consequences of our actions? What happens when we die?
3. to show that revenge is more complex than passion and anger; it always has a troubling philosophical dimension.
