Bullying Versus Normal Conflict Answers

1. A normal conflict is a disagreement or argument that happens between friends or peers, like choosing a game to play or deciding who gets a toy.
2. In bullying, the power between the kids is unequal. One kid often has more power and uses it to hurt the other.
3. Bullying happens again and again, even if the person being bullied asks for it to stop, while normal conflict happens once in a while.
4. In a normal conflict, both kids might be a little upset, but they often talk about it, find a solution, and feel better.
5. If someone is repeatedly mean and doesn't want to find a solution, it is more likely to be bullying.
