The doppelganger helps to develop the complexity of a character.

It can be used to show the “other self” of a character, which the character has not yet discovered. It can be used to show the darker side of a character (evil twin) or even the lighter side. It can also be a way of creating conflict in a story. This conflict can be either inner, in which the character struggles to understand themselves, or outer, when the character tries to undo something the doppelganger has done.
