American Independence Day, celebrated on July 4th, has its roots in the American Revolution, a pivotal period in American history. In the mid-18th Century, the American colonies were under British rule and faced increasing taxation and restrictions imposed by the British Crown. Tensions escalated, leading to events like the Boston Tea Party in 1773 and the Battles of Lexington and Concord in 1775. As discontent grew, delegates from the colonies convened in the Continental Congress.

On July 2, 1776, the Continental Congress adopted the Lee Resolution proposed by Richard Henry Lee of Virginia, which declared the American colonies independent from British rule. Two days later, on July 4th, they approved the Declaration of Independence, primarily authored by Thomas Jefferson. This historic document articulated the colonies' grievances, proclaimed their separation from Britain, and affirmed the unalienable rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. With the signing of the Declaration, the United States of America was born, and July 4th became a day of celebration and remembrance of the nation's hard-fought independence. The American Revolutionary War continued for several more years before culminating in the Treaty of Paris in 1783, officially recognizing the United States as an independent nation. Since then, July 4th has been celebrated annually as Independence Day, symbolizing the birth of the United States and the enduring ideals of freedom and democracy.
