

National Bird Day

Answer Key

Correction Marks

In a colorful forest called Featherwood there was a special tree that was home to a chirpy community of birds. These birds was known for their vibrant feathers and melodious songs. The leader of this flock was a wise old owl named Oliver, who taught the young birds about the wonders of the world.

One sunny morning the birds decided to hold a grand singing competition in the forest. Each bird practiced their tunes and shared their favorite songs, making Featherwood come alive with music. The friendly competition bought joy to everyone in the forest, from the sleepy squirrels to the inquisitive rabbits.

As the day turned into evening, the birds realized that the true magic was not in winning but in sharing their love for music and the happiness it brought to Featherwood. They sang one final, harmonious song together, celebrating their unity and the beauty of nature. The birds knew that their songs would continue to fill the forest with joy for generations to come.

Complete Passage

In a colorful forest called Featherwood, there was a special tree that was home to a chirpy community of birds. These birds were known for their vibrant feathers and melodious songs. The leader of this flock was a wise old owl named Oliver, who taught the young birds about the wonders of the world.

One sunny morning, the birds decided to hold a grand singing competition in the forest. Each bird practiced their tunes and shared their favorite songs, making Featherwood come alive with music. The friendly competition brought joy to everyone in the forest, from the sleepy squirrels to the inquisitive rabbits.

As the day turned into evening, the birds realized that the true magic was not in winning but in sharing their love for music and the happiness it brought to Featherwood. They sang one final, harmonious song together, celebrating their unity and the beauty of nature. The birds knew that their songs would continue to fill the forest with joy for generations to come.