

ANSWERS

1. how powerful the federal government should be
2. they decided to create a government in which power was balanced between three distinct branches, then ensured that each branch was allotted powers in a way that would allow it to “check” the power of the other two
3. The number of representatives in the House is based on state population, which means that the more populous the state, the greater the say it has in Congress. In the Senate, however, each state has two representatives.
4. the Legislative branch
5. by having the power to declare laws unconstitutional