

ANSWERS WILL VARY

Elegies are a way to honor and remember someone who has died. They are written as a way to commemorate them that can be shared with others. They also benefit the author of the elegy because they are a way to process and express personal loss. Elegies resonate with people because the death of a loved one is a universal human experience, and the emotions surrounding death are very strong.