A neologism is a brand new word that has recently been created. It is so new that it may not yet be in common use. The fact that it is new is an integral aspect of the neologism.

A portmanteau is a word made by blending the sounds and the meanings of two different words to create a new word with a single meaning. Being new is not an integral aspect of the portmanteau.

Anagrams are created by rearranging the letters of specific words which exist already to create a new word. Being new is not an integral aspect of the anagram.

Onomatopoeias are words that sound like what they describe. They can be neologisms but aren't necessarily.
