

ANSWERS

1. third person omniscient, which means that the narrator knows everything that is going on with everyone in the story
2. If the story was told from any of these limited perspectives, it would lose the sense of objectivity with which the events are presented to the reader and possibly prevent the reader from having as much context about the events of the story as a whole and how they interrelate.