

ANSWERS

1. Yes. When Romeo drinks the poison and dies because he thinks Juliet has done the same.
3. This scene evokes pity for the young lovers. It is relatable because everyone understands the experience of loss, and the play allows them to let go of any trapped emotions they may have from their own experiences. It also evokes pity because the situation was avoidable; it encourages the audience to reflect on the uselessness of holding onto grudges and negative feelings and that doing so can have tragic consequences.