The Secret Santa Surprise

Last week, a group of friends decided to play a game called Secret Santa. First, everyone wrote their names on little pieces of paper. Then the names were folded and put into a hat. Each person closed their eyes and picked one slip of paper. The name on the paper was the person they would buy a gift for.

The rule was simple: you could not tell anyone whose name you picked. That's why it's called Secret Santa! Everyone had a week to find or make a small gift. The gifts didn't need to cost a lot of money-some kids baked cookies, some drew pictures, and others bought little toys.

On the last day of school before winter break, the friends brought their gifts and put them under a big box decorated like a present. After lunch, it was time to open them! One by one, the gifts were passed out. Each person smiled when they opened a present, but they still didn't know exactly who gave it to them.

At the end, the friends guessed who their Secret Santa might be. Some guessed right, and some guessed wrong, but it didn't matter. Everyone agreed that the best part was giving and seeing their friends happy.
